While the people of Earth are starving they are slowly giving into their oncoming inevitable demise. A plant virus has almost wiped out all edible food on the entire planet. Those few who have it are hording it, those who don't are starving. Now when things are blackest for Earth, an enormous-sized comet hits the planet at the perfect angle in the Pacific, pushing the ocean water enough to cause a significant change in the Earths axis. Earth has been given a one- two punch...now there is only one way for mankind to survive both the starvation and climate change brought on by the impact of the comet. Some must be phased to repopulate the planet after the others have died out, if not, mankind will not remain as the dominate form on the planet Earth...for mankind will not remain at all.
