Excerpt from The Philadelphia Merchants Diary and Guide, for 1856: Being a Memorandum for Every Day in the Year, Almanac, Banking Table, Counting House Calendar, and a Correct Guide to All the Public Buildings, Places of Amusement, Literary, Scientific and Benevolent Institutions

After some unavoidable delay, which I much regret, I now present the Philadelphia merchants diary and guide, to my Patrons, and in a form so neat and compact, that I feel persuaded it will give general satisfaction. The delay was occasioned, in the first place, in procuring paper of the proper quality secondly, in the collection of the miscellaneous matter and, thirdly and lastly, the difficulty of procuring, in this city, the desired number of subscribers. Advertisements from New York and Boston were rejected, because I had stated in my Prospectus that the Work would be purely Philadelphian, and devoted exclusively to the advancement of the interests of Philadelphia. My Patrons will see that I have given all that I promised, with the exception of the circulation of the Philadelphia Newspapers and Magazines, which was omitted in consequence of the utter impossibility of obtaining correct in formation, and the boundaries of the Wards, which it was found would occupy too much space. I have, however, added other valuable information, the procuring of which cost me considerable time and expense. The location and nights of meeting of the different Lodges of the Freemasons, the Odd Fellows, and the Sons of Temperance, will be found an attractive, as well as convenient feature of the guide.
